Abstract: The article offers a look at the efforts of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), an international panel of scientists, to resolve the mystery associated with global warming. IPCC launched efforts to analyze the melting of ice sheets in the polar land masses Greenland and Antarctica. By measuring how fast ice sheets are melting, scientists can estimate how it could impact sea levels. Preliminary observations have shown that the movement of major glaciers in Greenland and the West Antarctic Ice Sheet is accelerating.

摘要: Abrevaya (1999b) considered estimation of a transformation model in the presence of left truncation. This paper observes that a cross-sectional version of the statistical model considered in Frederiksen et al. (2007) is a generalization of the model considered by Abrevaya (1999b) and the generalized model can be estimated by a pairwise comparison version of one of the estimators in Frederiksen et al. (2007). Specifically, our generalization will allow for discretized observations of the dependent variable. Downloaded from *Econometrics Journal* by University of Toronto on 05/07/10

GRAND CANYON FLOODING

1 PAGE, Ariz.—A massive flood swept through the Grand Canyon in early March. This was no act of nature or even an accident. Several miles upstream from the canyon, the U.S. government opened the spigots on the Glen Canyon Dam. Why? To save an endangered fish called the humpback chub.

For three days, more than 300,000 gallons of water per second rushed into the nation's most famous canyon. The goal was to build up sediment along the Colorado River.

Section: Editorial

A lonely old man named Winter came to us this week. We didn't expect him, but he came anyway. Not with the force and anger that we remember from years past, nor the gentleness of other years past when we talked about, wrote about and sang about a white Christmas that was always there. Jingle bells that always rang, snow birds that always flew, drifts and drifts of snow and layers and layers of ice as we looked out or our windows trying to find a relief from our Canadian cousins' certainty of the grandeur of winter.

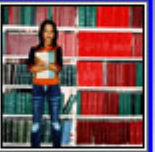

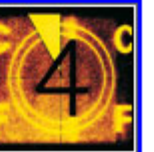

But just as soon as winter had come again, it was gone and then there it was again. Snow fell for a moment only and some strange temperatures were being reported in places that we'd not heard of before. Winter was here by calendar time. It was not here by people time. It was not here by Central Park time. It was not here by my time.

Some very smart people are telling us stories about a winter that did not come from the arctic and about a melt that should have taken place but didn't and a fear, it seems from everywhere, that winter will not come this year, at least not the kind of winters we used to know.

T. Rex Protein Evidence Links Dinosaurs to Birds

2:00-3:00 PM ,

You're listening to Talk of the Nation: Science Friday. I'm Ira Flatow. A brief program note. Neal Conan is back next Wednesday on Talk of the Nation, and he's broadcasting live from the Newseum, the new museum in Washington dedicated to the news. And if you're going to be in D.C., and you want free tickets to the audience, to be in the audience for that live broadcast of Talk of the Nation send an email to tickets@npr.org. So, tickets@npr.org, and you can sit in the audience. If you want to be in our audience today, our phone number 1-800-989-8255.

Also, we're in Second Life and for the first time, we're now in Second Life teen grid. If you're a teenager, only teenagers allowed in the teen grid. If you're a teenager, you want to hear the show in Second Life and ask questions with avatars. You can head over to the Eye4you Alliance Island and talk to other avatars to send us some questions. And for the rest of the hour we're going to pick up on a story that you may have heard here just about a year ago. Last April, scientists announced the discovery of soft tissue preserved deep inside a fossilized 68-million-year-old T. Rex bone. That was a feat in itself finding that soft tissue. And at that time a paleontologist and a chemist joined forces to show that the tissue was the dinosaur's collagen protein.

And now they've had the chance to study those dino proteins searching for evolutionary links between dinosaurs and living animals. And their paper is out in today's issue of the journal Science. And joining us now to talk about dinosaurs and their closest living relatives, the birds, is one of the paper's authors. Mary Higby Schweitzer is an associate professor of Marine, Earth, and Atmospheric Science at NC State University, North Carolina State, and an associate curator of Paleontology at the North Carolina Museum of Natural Sciences in Raleigh. And she joins us from our office at NC State. Welcome back to the program.

Professor MARY HIGBY SCHWEITZER (Associate Professor, Marine, Earth and Atmospheric Science, North Carolina State University): Well, thanks. Thanks for having me.

FLATOW: When we talked last year, you and your colleague John Asara at Harvard had shown that the soft tissue you recovered from that 68-million-year-old T. Rex was collagen, right?

Prof. SCHWEITZER: That is what we did show you.

FLATOW: And since then you've done a more analysis and you worked out the similarities between dinosaur protein and some protein in living animals. Tell us what you found.
