1. ▲ Stevenson v. Superior Court

Supreme Court of California | Aug 27, 1997 | 16 Cal. 4th 880

Overview: Age discrimination in employment violated a fundamental public policy and permitted a common law cause of action for tortious wrongful discharge against an employer with five or more workers; statutory remedies were not exclusive.

Age discrimination in employment violated a fundamental public policy and permitted a ... hospital, and contended that the termination was because of her age, 60, and her benefits as a 30-year employee. Petitioner filed ... claiming wrongful discharge in violation of a public policy against age discrimination. Real party in interest demurred, contending that fundamental public policy was not violated by age discrimination in employment. The superior court sustained the demurrer on that ... appeal, the court reversed and remanded. The court held that age discrimination in employment violated a fundamental public policy and thereby permitted ... five or more workers. The court further concluded that the age discrimination remedies of the Fair Employment and Housing Act ... brought by a former employee, who was discharged at the age of 60 after 30 years of employment, for wrongful discharge in violation of the public policy against age discrimination. The policy against age discrimination in employment, as applied to work over 40 years of age and to employers who regularly employ more than four workers, ...

期刊文章：以 Reinforcing Participatory Governance Through International Human Rights Obligations of Political Parties 为例

Highlight

Contemporary human rights law has seen direct international obligations extended to armed groups and businesses. This Article argues that international human rights obligations are crystallizing with respect to a further category of nonstate actor, political parties, albeit only in relation to political participation rights. After briefly examining the largely procedural nature and scope of those rights under international law, this Article surveys existing international and transnational sources of obligations of political parties, including both those in power and in opposition. In an effort to buttress these sources and encourage their proliferation, this Article then considers rationales for such obligations, building in part upon the rationales for human rights obligations of businesses and armed groups. Finally, the Article offers some thoughts on possible means of implementing political parties' emerging international obligations in respect of political participation rights.

Introduction

Footnotes（脚注），
文献交叉引用

States have traditionally stood alone as subjects of international law. Modern practice and scholarship have extended international legal personality or status, in varying degrees, to international organizations, individuals, armed groups, and businesses. ¹ Political parties have not figured in this expansionary process, yet they are natural bearers of direct international obligations corresponding to political participation rights--essentially, the rights to vote and to stand in free, periodic elections--as enshrined in all major international human rights instruments, and as discussed further in [*148] Part I. ² Though largely overlooked by scholarship, ³ such obligations are arguably already crystallizing with respect to political parties.
